NEC Code Questions and Answers.....

Q. Is an over-counter light in a dwelling unit kitchen allowed to be hardwired to the small-appliance circuit?

A. The 20A, 120V small-appliance circuits required by 210.11(C)(1) must not supply outlets for luminaires or appliances [210.52(B)(2)].

Ex 1: The 20A, 120V small-appliance branch circuit can be used to supply a receptacle for an electric clock.

Ex 2: A receptacle can be connected to the small-appliance branch circuit to supply a gas-fired range, oven, or counter-mounted cooking unit.

A range hood or above the range microwave listed as a range hood must be supplied by an individual branch circuit [422.16(B)(4)(5)].ing if this circuit supplies luminaires, receptacles, or both [210.23(A)(2)], as shown in the Figure above.

All questions and answers are based on the 2008 NEC, taken from EC&M (http://ecmweb.com/nec/code_qa/)

February Lamp Special

We've been notified that linear fluorescent lamp prices will be going up once again. In anticipation of fairly large increases, we've made a special truckload buy of some of the most popular lamps. Pricing is good thru the end of the month. We've also been warned that supply shortages will continue to be an issue over the coming months. Plan your jobs accordingly.
